WORKING PAPER

Target #: 5269
Date: 7 June 90
Time: 0905-1410
Viewer: 052
Session: 01

SUMMARY OF INFORMATION:

The target is an activity or event. There is a cylindrical shape that is clear and see-through. There is something inside it that seems to be moving through it and out on one end. The stuff inside it is light, smooth, stringy, air, and it is moving down, making a "whoosh" sound. It is speeding up as it goes down and out. It makes me want to throw up.

The cylindrical shape seems to be in the bottom of something, in a horizontal position. It could be in the bottom of a square box. There is a bomb in the box and it explodes. It makes me think of a bomb blowing up a person. I can see red, fire, and jagged flames. The outside of the box seems to have diagonal lines going from left to right and right to left.

Something about the target makes my nose burn, my eyes water, choke, and makes me feel queasy enough to vomit. It makes me think of gas. It also makes me think of a car and a car crash. Something is political, dizzy, confused, stuffy, lunatic, nervous and colorful. I keep seeing a small blue spot of light and three shapes. One of the three shapes seems to be more important than the others.

Probers Say Cassette Player Held Bomb in 141

LOCKERBIE, From A29

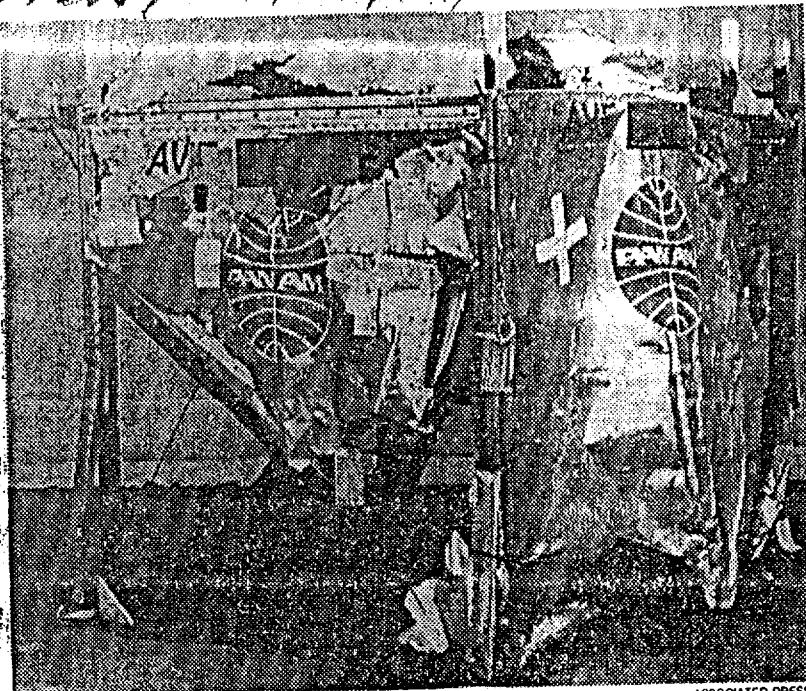

Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command, a radical group headed by former Syrian Army captain Ahmed Jibril and opposed to the mainstream Palestine Liberation Organization leadership of Yasser Arafat.

Interviewed last month in Damascus by ABC television, Jibril denied any involvement in the Lockerbie bombing, but confirmed that Dalkamouni was in possession of the air-pressure sensor. He said it and a haul of seized weapons, explosives and ammunition were meant for use against Israel.

Replying to questions in Lockerbie, Orr said the container with the explosives was loaded with a "limited amount of interline baggage," or luggage originating in other airports, and "the rest" was "made up of Frankfurt baggage."

Orr invoked the "balance of probability" in pinpointing Frankfurt. But he declined to provide further details about the size or make of the cassette player or the nature of the explosive or detonator employed, for fear of compromising the international investigation.

Speaking before the German rebuttals, sources close to the investigation here said they were convinced that the cassette player was loaded in Frankfurt on the Boeing 727 feeder flight. However, they conceded that the explosives may have been slipped aboard the Boeing 747 when the Frankfurt feeder flight's cargo was transferred at London's Heathrow airport.

Later, British Transport Secretary Paul Channon said passengers' radios and other electrical equipment might have to be banned from airliners because scanning equipment could fail to detect bombs within them. "There are a number of devices like this which can be taken on board but cannot be opened," Channon told reporters in Montreal, where the International Civil Aviation Organization was meeting on security at airports.

Earlier, journalists for the first time were shown a former chemical warehouse in Lockerbie where police employees in white overalls, gloves and masks were sorting through cargo and personal belongings of the 259 passengers and crew collected from a 845-square-mile area after the aircraft disintegrated at 31,000 feet and crashed into this town in southern Scotland.

More than 10,000 computer entries have been made and the items stored in more than 200 cardboard boxes and plastic sacks. Police announced that those items no longer needed for the investigation would be returned to their owners or their relatives, starting today.
